

OBITUARY

by Karl Miller

seeing you spent in black & white brought back your dare-jump off a roof

into the chlorinated pool from which you rose
laughing wildly
a crazed Boticelli

I went by the same pool today roof sagging & flaking paint haunted the kids
who played there
oblivious to your

ghost still moving unmindfully
in the
broken summer light